Mark Twain, the Irrepressible.

The news of the failure of Mark Twain's publishing house was probably received by a large part of the public with a slight measure of incredulity. Mark has been guilty of so many jokes that it is hard to guess when he is actually in earnest, and not a few of his admirers still suspect him of having merely tried to play a fresh prank upon their sympathies. He began life by playing jokes on his parents. According to his mother, "his father would often start him off to school, and in a little while house, and Sam would take his father and the teacher both said it was of no use try to teach Samanynot to learn. But I never gave up. he was always a great boy for history, and could never get tired of that kind of reading, but he hadn't any use for school houses and text-books."
